Feminist Research Practice

At no point in recorded history has there been an absence of intense, and heated, discussion about the subject of how to conduct relations between women and men. This Handbook provides a comprehensive guide to these omnipresent issues and debates, mapping the present and future of thinking about feminist theory. The chapters gathered here present the state of the art in scholarship in the field, covering Epistemology and marginality Literary, visual, and cultural representations Sexuality Macro and microeconomics of gender Conflict and peace. The most important consensus in this volume is that a central organizing tenet of feminism is its willingness to examine the ways in which gender and relations between men and women have (and are) organized. The authors bring a shared commitment to the critical appraisal of gender relations, as well as a recognition that to think ‘theoretically’ is not to detach concerns from lived experience but to extend the possibilities of understanding. With this focus on theory and theorizing about the world in which we live, this Handbook asks us, across all disciplines and situations, to abandon our taken-for-granted assumptions about the world and interrogate both the origins and the implications of our ideas about gender relations and feminism. It is an essential reference work for advanced students and academics not only of feminist theory, but of gender and sexuality across the humanities and social sciences.

Handbook of Feminist Research

In Decolonial Feminist Research: Haunting, Remembrance and Mothers, Jeong-eun Rhee embarks on a deeply personal inquiry that is demanded by her dead mother’s haunting remembrance and promises what has become her work/life question: What methodologies are available to notice and study a reality that exceeds and defies modern scientific ontology and intelligibility? Rhee is a Korean migrant American educational qualitative researcher, who learns anew how to notice, feel, research, and write her mother’s remembrance across time, geography, languages, and ways of knowing and being. She draws on Toni Morrison’s concept of “rememory” and Theresa Hak Kyung Cha’s “fragmented-multi self.” Using various genres such as poems, dialogues, fiction, and theories, Rhee documents a multi-layered process of conceptualizing, researching, and writing her (m/others) transnational rememory as a collective knowledge project of intergenerational decolonial feminists of color. In doing so, the book addresses the following questions: Why do researchers write their m/others’ stories? Why do researchers write their m/others’ transnational rememory? What can we learn from m/others’ stories about themselves, about the world, and about the future that we can never be narrated with logic and reason? What methodologies can be used to work through and with both personal and collective losses, wounds, and connections that have become your questions? Rhee shows how to feel connectivity and fragmentation as/of self not as binary but as constitutive through rememory and invites readers to explore possibilities of decolonial feminist research as an affective bridge to imagine, rememory, and engender healing knowledge. Embodied onto-epistemologies of women of color haunt and thus demand researchers to contest and cross the boundary of questions, topics, methodologies, and academic disciplinary knowledge that are counted as relevant, appropriate, and legitimate within a dominant western science regime. This book is for qualitative researchers and feminist scholars who are pursuing these kinds of boundary-crossing “personal” inquiries.
